The Pick-up went on sale in September 1960 and was only removed from the line-up in 1981, at the same time as the Van. Some 58,000 units rolled off the assembly line, which amounted to just one per cent of all Minis produced. An intriguing option for the Pick-up was the tarpaulin and hoops, which protected on-board loads from the elements.

Following the Mini saloon's introduction in August 1959, the van version of BMC's revolutionary small car arrived in January 1960, followed by the pick-up in 1961. Built on a longer wheelbase than the saloon, the commercial Mini's front-wheel drive and compact independent rear suspension enabled it to match many more-expensive medium-sized vans for interior space.
